I do what I am paid for, and I do it well.". 5. Bring Something To The Party This is a bit of a no-brainer, but it is still worth repeating: Bring something to the office Christmas party. It doesn't have to be anything huge or expensive, but chances are some poor soul has had to do all the preparing for it by themselves. Volunteering to bring something to eat or some drinks mixers will not only ease their burden, it'll make you a respected member of the office. 6. Don't Stay On Your Own Nobody likes it when someone keeps to themselves during the festivities, so to get through office Christmas parties easier and happier, be sure to socialize with a few people. You don't have to stick to the people in your office, and you certainly don't have to go circulate with the drunken leery guy, but saying a cordial hello or having a nice chat with someone else would certainly raise your office standing. Even better, make sure you speak to the newest member of the office team. If it's their first Christmas party as part of the office, they'll be nervous enough, so a few friendly words from you (or even a full-blown chat) will not only win you a potential new friend, but also let you be seen as friendly, amiable and a general all-round good egg. Pumpkins Pumpkins are a staple of Halloween so make sure you have plenty scattered around your house. They can even be plastic for an easy reusable option. Invite a few other families, make a map and send it out with a time to meet and directions. Drive in a caravan (don't forget to crank up the carols!) and end the evening with hot cocoa. 11. Try and Leave Before You're Not Missed Conversely to the above advice, a great tip can be to leave before you're missed, i.e. before everyone starts getting catastrophically drunk and revealing things they'd much rather not. Restraint is an untapped virtue in the modern world, and cutting yourself off can not only allow you to feel much better—you'll have more time to sleep off the hangover, after all—it can also make your colleagues and friends subconsciously make their time with you more important and meaningful. Leave an hour or two early, reap the benefits and leave the regretful shenanigans to the others. 12. Leave The Eggnog To The Experts Everyone thinks they can be a bartender when the chips are down, and while the physical components might all be there (you have hands, alcohol and a mixing apparatus), there's a reason bartending is a profession. It's hard and tricky, so don't try and be the best drunken bartender in the world, because your chances of failure will skyrocket. If you really want to mix a drink for someone, make sure that it's something simple. Check out some easier recipes, such as a vodka screwdriver cocktail, if you want to prepare yourself or a friend a drink at the party. However, save the complicated ones for the people who know what they're doing. Remember, this isn't Mad Men. 13. Use The Mistletoe Sparingly Is there anything worse than a mistletoe creep? Not much, and certainly not at an office Christmas party. Mistletoe has been used since Iron Age times as part of rituals, recently adapted in the 20th century as something for people to kiss under at Christmas (although hanging over doorways reportedly harkens back to the times of the Druids, when they used it ward off evil). However, too much mistletoe at office Christmas parties can spoil an otherwise lovely event. A lot of the time, people simply don't want to be kissing each other, and while the idea is a charming sentiment, it's also encouraging some not-very-professional behavior. Leave a single sprig somewhere, if at all. "Please describe yourself in a few words". It's the job interview of your life and you need to come up with something fast. Mental pictures of words are mixing in your head and your tongue tastes like alphabet soup. You mutter words like "deterministic" or "innovativity" and you realize you're drenched in sweat.
